after the design and installation of the system occurred. Because the contract at issue expressly disclaimed any liability for work done prior to its execution, and because the undisputed material facts demonstrated that the system was designed and installed in the home prior to that date, the Court found defendant was entitled to summary judgment. [Harold Lewis, et al. v. Sigman Indoor Climate Solutions, et al., St. Charles County, Missouri Circuit Court; No. 1711-CC00994]

- Secured summary judgment for client in case where plaintiff sued his co-employee for plaintiff's workplace injuries. Judgment was affirmed by Missouri Supreme Court, which found co-employee's negligence was result of breach of employer's nondelegable duty to provide a safe workplace; thus, negligence was the employer's, not the co-employee's. [Matthew Fogerty v. Larry Meyer, Missouri Supreme Court No. SC96030] Ruling in case changed Missouri law regarding co-employee liability and when one co-employee may sue another.
